From the (Boston) Repertory.

We have it from Mr. Jefferson that "the republican ſyſtem is in the full tide of ſucceſsful experiment." With what ſincerity or conſiſtency this was ſaid by him in March, 1801, when he meditated the great changes of the officers and principles, and even frame of the government itſelf which has ſince taken place, may be a matter of party diſpute but is no longer any kind of doubt with ſenſible men. How ſucceſsful a ſyſtem can be when the worſt men riſe, and riſe not only by the worſt arts, but by the very nature of the ſyſtem itſelf, which leaves every avenue open for the practice of thoſe arts, is a queſtion peculiarly fitted to the logic and ingenuity of the philoſophers, who in every affair of political buſineſs lay matter of fact out of the caſe. Principles, they will perſevere in ſaying, are eternal: the republican ſyſtem is ever the beſt, and moſt emphatically the beſt when it foſters the ambition of demagogues and knaves to uſe it and abuſe it for their own excluſive advantage. They will certainly maintain their theory till the army or the mob adminiſters or interprets the conſtitution, inſtead of the judges, and until Mr. Jefferſon is ſucceſsively chief of the directory, firſt conſul and emperor.

But from the ſickening and terrifying contemplation of the means by which theſe bad men roſe to power, let us turn to the figure they make in the poſſeſſion of it. Have we any hope of national glory to conſole us for the ſhame of ſubmitting to the deſpotiſm of the meaneſt and worſt of men. While we have rulers whom we cannot poſſibly obey without diſguſt and contempt, it would be ſome comfort, and ſome advantage too, if they were men whom foreign nations would not hear without reſpect, nor offend without dread.

But alas! the mob courting arts of our demagogues are not lower than their ſpirit. They reſerve their courage for their party foes, and all their meekneſs for French and Spaniſh aggreſſors. The cut-throat decree of general Ferrand, denouncing death to all lawful traders with the blacks of St. Domingo, obtains infinitely more regard from our rulers than the propoſed amendment of Maſſachuſetts, ſhewing concluſively how the rights of the ſtate are ſubject to the controul of Virginia, founded on the votes given for juſt ſuch a ſet of blacks. The Haytians will ſhew fifty times the ſpirit on the occaſion, that the court at Waſhington will feel, or dare to ſhew if they felt. Holland, or the Ciſalpine republic, would as ſoon offend Bonaparte, as our emperor hazard any meaſure that would call on our power to vindicate our national rights. Sooner than hazard popularity he will ſacrifice commerce. When has it happened before in the world, that the leaſt warlike or the feebleſt nation has thus ſunk into ſervitude without a blow. We know now what the famous bill for prohibiting all intercourſe with St. Domingo, was introduced for. Our government was firſt to forbid on pain of forfeiture, to abate the ſhock, when the French ſhould forbid on paid of death. Is there any condition of diſgrace below ours? The Dutch are forced to be ſlaves; they can ſay it is owing to theſe bonds; but we are abject in ſpirit and ſink into dependence, becauſe we could not bear the conſtraint of keeping ourſelves screwed up to the dignity of a nation. We have bought Louiſiana when Spain, the beaten, humbled Spain, occluded the port of New-Orleans. We thought of no other ſort of redreſs than ſuch as ſouthern revenue would buy.

When France robbed our trade, Monroe the miniſter of Waſhington, officially aſſured the Directory, that the people of America would rejoice if our ſpoils went to aid the French republic. Mr. Jefferſon's own election was publicly urged as proper, becauſe it would be agreeable to France. No wonder ſuch men have contrived to ſink the nation down to their own level. No wonder Mr. Jefferſon bears the wrongs ſuffered by commerce when he conſiders all active commerce as tending to make "great ſores" of our trading cities. No wonder he is tame, when it is known that he ſays all war is wrong, and even when aſked what he would do if the country was invaded, he replied, ſome other expedient might be found out. No wonder we ſay again, when the wounds that threaten gangrene in New England produce neither pain nor pity in Virginia. The Romans bought peace of the Gauls, and afterwards of the Goths, with their own money. That we have done. But we go further now, and are willing that the minions of Bonaparte ſhall take their own meaſure of ſatisfaction out of our ſkins.

It is falſe, and impudent to ſay in reply, that Waſhington was equally, abject to Great Britain. He firſt negociated, but he negociated with arms in his hands. New revenue, new regiments and militia, and ſhips were provided, in ſpite of the oppoſition of theſe very rulers who then ſaid, no arms but confiſcation. Our principles are our weapons, and ſympathetic Newgate, and Botany bay were ready to reſpond, Amen. But Waſhington meant war if negociation failed, and ſo ſaid every leading federaliſt. Be it remembered too, Waſhington recalled and diſgraced the ſlave Monroe.

Nor let it be forgotten that this man, whom the people of Sierra Leone would diſdain to ſend ambaſſador to the King of Whidah in Africa, is ſelected by Mr. Jefferſon to aſſert our rights in Europe with the very ſame ſort of ſpirit that he himſelf maintains them. Perhaps too they will ſay Mr. Adams would have kneeled to Bonaparte in like manner. It was their loud accuſation againſt him that he breathed war, and they urged the election of Mr. Jefferſon as being the man of peace. Didius Julianus bought the Roman Empire at auction, and he was in a hurry to enjoy his purchaſe. He turned with diſguſt from the noiſe of war in Illyricum or Thrace to the ſoothing huzzas of protorian guards and of the Roman mob.

The objects of the man who riſes by mob favour, and is ſtill obliged to court it, are all perſonal, all mean, all temporary, with the low rabble of demagogues he may ſeem to be a Prince, but in his intercourſe with Princes he will inevitably ſink down again to be a demagogue, and the nation will ſink with him. We have experienced what it is for the French to deſpiſe us: not only ſo, but we are daily affronted and pillaged by their veſſels. What are we to think of the government that is ſo far from being roused by blows to revenge that it is not roused to feeling, not even when they are inflicted by a ſlave's hands.

A weak nation might have ſome excuſe for its tameneſs; but the ſecond commercial nation in the world is repreſented by its rulers in a manner that would have reſtricted the bounds of the Roman republic to the banks of the Tiber, and its perrenial fame to the periſhable traditions of a barbarous clan. We are as vain as the Romans in their origin; as corrupt as they in their meridian; and without having felt adverſity, more abject than they became in their fall.

The fault is not in our nation, unleſs it be in chooſing men whom foreign nations deſpiſe almoſt as heartily as we do ourſelves.

LONDON, March 18.

We have received Paris papers to the 9th. The ſeſſion of the Legiſlative body was put an end to on the 6th, by a ſpeech from one of the government orators, M. de Segur. He expreſſed the Emperor's complete approbation of their conduct; dwelt upon the impoſing ceremony of the coronation, rendered more auguſt, by the preſence and participation of the Pope; alluded to the laws that had been paſſed during the ſeſſion; to the excellent ſtate of the finances; to the new conſcription, and to the pacific overture of this country. Upon the conſcript law he made the following remarks:—Whilſt amongſt our enemy every thing is in a ſtate of fermentation and agitation, you have proved by a law upon the conſcription that we do not ſtand in need of freſh efforts, and this new law differs only from the laſt, by a more juſt and modern diſtribution relative to our coaſt and maritime departments. Upon the pacific overture he ſaid, "It was at the moment in which a warrior, almoſt always favoured by fortune, might have promiſed himſelf freſh laurels, that ſilencing his paſſions, Napolean modeſtly propoſed peace to our enemies. If blood muſt flow upon the earth and ſea, his letter forever abſolves us, and throws all the reſponſibility upon that blind government which would prolong the effuſion of it." M. de Segur proceeded to ſtate that the emperor's conſtant endeavours were to give repoſe to his county, independence to the ſeas, and peace to the world.

The Moniteur has not publiſhed any further details with reſpect to the capture of the Mediterranean convoy, and it does not appear that one of the captured ſhips has yet reached a French port; indeed we know that the enemy exaggerated the numbers, and our prediction, that many would be found to have made their eſcape has been verified.

The anger manifeſted by the Moniteur, at the cool reception which Bonaparte's fallacious overture of peace experienced in this country, and the fear which it expreſſes, leaſt Engliſh ſubſidy ſhould be accepted by any of the continental powers, afford the beſt poſſible explanation of the ſtate, and of the views of the French government. They are worth volumes of idle reports from ill-informed travellers. They ſhew at once that France is completely baffled in her views of ſubjugating this country, and even more, that "England, ſingle-handed," is more than a match for her; they ſhew the changeable and ſhifting politics of the uſurper, that when he could not compaſs his end by open force, he endeavors to do it by fraud; by an offer of peace, or rather a truce, which ſhould induce us to diſarm, and leave ourſelves expoſed to freſh manœuvres. They confirm the wiſdom of the late miniſtry in commencing the war before our enemy had completed his preparations, and of the preſent, in declining to be duped by a pretended pacific overture.

The Toulon Fleet.

Of the Toulon fleet, the Paris official paper ſtates, that it ſailed from that port the 15th January, 1805, with a large body of troops under general Louriſton, and that after being at ſea four days, was overtaken by a violent ſtorm, and obliged to return into port. The account of the capture of the Britiſh ſloop of war Arrow, and the Acheron bomb, with about twenty ſail of the Malta homeward-bound fleet, by two frigates which parted in the gale is confirmed. The Arrow fought L'Incorruptible, of 44 guns, an hour and a quarter, had 57 men killed and wounded; and ſunk immediately after the action. Her vigorous reſiſtance effected the eſcape of 10 or 12 of her convoy. All the reſt taken were deſtroyed; and the Engliſh priſoners landed at Carthagena. It was conjectured the Toulon fleet was bound to Egypt.—Lord Nelſon, who was cruizing off Sardinia, with 12 ſail of the line, had immediate intelligence of the ſailing of the Toulon fleet; and was in full purſuit, when it returned to port.

March 15.

An American ſhip from the Texel, which had arrived in Dover Roads yeſterday afternoon, has brought the important intelligence of the ſailing of the Dutch fleet from the texel on Monday laſt. Previouſly to their ſailing an embargo was laid on all merchantmen. It ſtill continued after the fleet ſailed; but the American and five other ſhips made their eſcape in the night.

The Toulon Fleet.

Of the Toulon fleet, the Paris official per states, that it sailed from that port 15th January, 1805, with a large body troops under general Lauriston, and t after being at sea four days, was over en by a violent storm, and obliged to rn into port. The account of the cap e of the British sloop of war Arrow, the Acheron bomb, with about twen
ail of the Malta homeward-bound fleet, wo frigates which parted in the gale is firmed. The Arrow fought L'Incor ible, of 44 guns, an hour and a quar had 57 men killed and wounded; and k immediately after the action. Her rous resistance effected the escape of or 12 of her convoy. All the rest taken e destroyed; and the English prisoners ed at Carthagena. It was conjectured Toulon fleet was bound to Egypt.——
d Nelson, who was cruizing off Sardi with 12 sail of the line, had immedi ntelligence of the sailing of the Toulon
; and was in full pursuit, when it re ed to port.

place she left on Thursday, the Dutch fleet had its first movement, two line of battle ships belonging to it having come down into the outer roads. This circumstance, no doubt, gave rise to the report brought by an American ship which put into Dover, that the Dutch squadron had actually put to sea.

Sweden has been obliged by the remonstrances of Prussia, to decline the proffered subsidy from this country.

Portugal is stated to have purchased, with the concurrence of this country, the sufferance of France to remain neutral in the war, by a yearly subsidy of six millions of crusades.

Such was the activity of the Marine Department in Spain that twelve ships of the line were completed for sea during the last month, and an equal number are to be equipped within the present month.

The courts of Vienna, and Petersburg are decidedly hostile to the intended creation of a Monarchy in Lombardy. Austria has remonstrated in strong terms against the change, as being contrary to the stipulations of the treaty of Luneville, and we understand it is for the present deferred. Prussia has on the contrary, recommended the measure, as tending to establish the tranquility of that country, and as barring any views or claims which Austria may entertain in regard to it.

The French papers in an article which we published on Tuesday, stated, that the French government would not undertake partial operations, but would strike several blows at us at once.

What will the enemy of the financial system of this country say when we state, that by the beneficial operation of the Sinking Fund, no less a sum than 1,698,920*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* is at present applied, per quarter, to the reduction of the national debt, and that the sum already redeemed amounts to 113,528,393*l.* sterling.

TUESDAY, MAY 7.

Extract of a letter from Gonaives, dated April 12.

"By the last accounts from the city of St. Domingo, we are credibly informed that 9 sail of the line have arrived at that place, with French troops, destined against this country. The Indigene army, after making a dreadful attempt on that city, have been repulsed, and beat off with the loss of one eighth of their men, and are now all retreating home to their several divisions. The Emperor has arrived at Port au Prince, on his way to this place, from the city of St. Domingo."

Extract of a letter from Cape Francois, dated April 18.

"The Haytian army have returned without success from the siege of St. Domingo; Gen. Christophe is at present in town. They have brought with them a great quantity of plunder taken from the Spaniards."

Extract of another letter from Cape Francois, dated April 19.

"The Emperor has come into this city. His army is repulsed, owing to the arrival of the French fleet at the City of St. Domingo. The Americans, their main standby, will in consequence be more respected. They will now go to pealing coffee, and it is scarcely presumeable that the French can march from St. Domingo, with 5,000 troops with success."

The brig Massasoit, capt. Freeman, arrived at Cherburg, (France) from Boston, in February, and was immediately put in quarantine for 40 days. A letter from a gentleman on board, says, that a new order from the Emperor had been issued, ordering that all the papers of vessels arriving in the ports of France, should be sent to Paris to be examined before they could enter.

French advices to the 4th of March, have been received, by the brig Lovely Lass, captain Clark, arrived at this port from Nantz. They mention, that the French government intended to demand a sum of money from the United States, as a retribution for the produce, which had been taken from their revolted colonies, by the American merchants.

It remains to be seen with what temper Mr. Jefferson's warlike Cabinet will listen to this unprecedented demand.

A Decree of the French government has passed, granting pensions, payable in Paris, to the Men, Women, and Children who were Emigrants from St. Domingo.

(Phil. Register.)

By a gentleman passenger in the brig Lovely Lass, from Nantz, we are informed of an act of the French government which renders this account by no means improbable. Bonaparte, it appears, in the midst of his higher concerns, has not been unmindful of the unfortunate exiles from St. Domingo. A decree has been issued by him, declaring that every subject, formerly residing in that colony, who may have been exiled from his home and property by the brigands, shall be allowed from the national treasury 300 livres per year, every married man 500, and for each child 100. That this provision should have been made without an eye to the ultimate recovery of the property sacrificed by the Brigands is incredible; and surely Bonaparte will not apply for renumeration to the blacks.

The gentleman has a copy of the decree, but has not been able immediately to lay hand upon it.

The report of a decree annulling the marriage of Jerome Bonaparte, has also been deemed a fiction in this country—We however find in the Moniteur of the 1st March, the official document to this effect. It differs from that we have already published only in the concluding words, which are, "without the consent of his mother, and without the banns thereof being previously published in the place of his abode.

SECT. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Keeper of the poor and work houses, shall be allowed a compensation for his services, to be ascertained by the Common Council at the commencement of each year.

STRAY HORSE.

Strayed from the subscriber living in Alexandria, on the 26th April, a dark SORREL HORSE, about nine or ten years old, about fourteen hands high, his two hind feet white, one more white than the other, his breast remarkably spotted, some saddle marks, shod all round, paces, racks and canters, but seldom trots. He was seen on the Sunday afternoon following crossing the run below Hartshorne's mill, going towards French's old fields. He was bought from about Charlestown, and sold here; it is probable he will endeavour to return. I will give a reward of five dollars to any person delivering him to me, if taken within ten miles of town, if further reasonable charges.

William Harper.
